Q: I am trying to get the push id of multiple phones when a user clicks on an event. I can't see the function being triggered from the remote-event service I am trying to get the push id of multiple phones when a user clicks on an event. I can't see the function being triggered from the remote-event service. Also, I would like to know if there is any api that will automatically connect my app to the firebase servers without me having to create an actual database and or the authentication details. Thank you in advance A: For the first part of your question, the Push Notification Service API does not support multiple device connections (i.e., it cannot receive multiple registration tokens for multiple devices on your app). However, for the second part of your question, you can create an App Engine application that serves as a proxy for the Firebase Instance ID API. This proxy allows you to use your Firebase Instance ID API credentials, which means your application can make the real API calls directly. For more details, see our Instance ID Application Proxy documentation. Mr. Schultz is a man of rare talent and energy. He's a champion of inclusive democracy and a defender of liberty. A champion of bold national action, he helped restore the national credit and get us back to growth. And while I agree with him on most policy positions, I am deeply disappointed that, in this last debate, Mr. Schultz indicated he would vote to block a man of Mr. Trump's character from becoming president. And Mr. Schultz, I understand that, like so many of us, you have a difficult time admitting when you are wrong. But if I am right about Mr. Trump, as I believe I am, you must accept that Mr. Trump will have a full and fair chance to explain his actions and ideas to the American people, and to earn their votes.
